

Moulin de la Galette.

Renoir

by Jerry Ratch

Light seen as sunlight through a Japanese shade Red through many of their mouths, and often their hair but also spots of a duller red on the back of this gentleman's coat and the back of his head The woman stares at him without smiling from three tables away. Paying slight attention the gentleman listens to this young girl's mother admonishing him to consider the true fair-haired beauty of her daughter here, who has grown so delicate and fresh under her hand. The gentleman may want to spend a few minutes alone with her daughter in conversation. While the artist and his friend look on the entirety, without desire or plan

Renoir, Moulin de la Galette, 1876 (Musee d'Orsay)

