

Beverly

by John Riley

Nothing is sweeter to me now than remembering my mind when we listened to the chimes outside our door at Foster's Corner, wind so icy we were afraid to kiss, me wondering how something as cold as gold-painted tin could make such a sound as that.

