

My Single Mother

by Johnny Dantonio

Like the willow she stands alone, swaying. Looking at winter months, she mourns for Spring beauty, aged by the children who used to swing upon her branches. As they grew, they strayed. Now she only moves when memory's wind whispers, where she can not hide her weeping.

