A Traitor of the Better Kind

by Jules Archer

Justification is a chant tattooed on the inside of my wrist. The pretty things you say to me when I will not swallow. Go ahead, boy, pout like a fool. The braids you put me in will cut and tear down my nastiness.

Give me, give me a side of stale satisfaction for I will be good and get gold, justifying in weathered and knee-scuffed jeans the lollipop-style I suck and shear.

The crazy girl is thinking again, you say. Spouting treacle and chaining her wrists. But stale limelight is unwanted. I have my head on a pillow when you leave and I sigh my loudest.

Available online at «http://fictionaut.com/stories/jules-archer/a-traitor-of-the-better-kind» Copyright © 2011 Jules Archer. All rights reserved.