

Fossil Beach

by Kitty Boots

half-winter, half-spring did I live my life yet?

something blooms, while something lies dormant the grandmother tree, roots reach out, whispering a dust devil gathers dry leaves in a tornadic twist and blocks the trail to the fossil beach as sparrows land on the cliffs gar bones are strewn on the shore something to treasure later, as I pocket them to work into another dream

