

gathering

by Kitty Boots

north of the equator skeletons with crooked little fingers lie buried in finery, with flowers faded, yet still fragrant the moon tops the monolith and grins pale the deer on the edge of the forest is indigo blue and she dances on the shoulder of a shaman drum beats, footsteps we seek to keep time gaze into the smokey fire and raise our cups to a ghostly clan

