

One Sentence

by Lindsay Marianna Walker

The summer we were fourteen we snuck out of our houses to set off black-cat firecrackers every night in the discouraged, old math-teacher's front yard; in August, her husband died of heart-failure.

(This is a one-sentence story. Fictionaut demands 200 characters to be published... I think I'm there now...)

