

Straps

by Lindsay Marianna Walker

The date with the Doctor I met on the Internet didn't go well until he told me about treating high school football players who'd been hit wrong and instantly become quadriplegics. Then he made black tea, which tasted like ginger, and opened a box of shortbread cookies. I let him kiss my neck and shoulders, he kept saying "Beautiful. Beautiful."

