

Four More Haikus

by Mark Waldrop

Death is like a warm
cup of hot cocoa, steaming up into nothing.

The sun rise will bring prison bars of light through the bedroom blinds again.

Sorry about the first three hours of your death I thought you were drunk.

Across the park the strange dog looks up, sniffs the air it's ears are floppy.

