

Superheroes

by Mark Waldrop

I change things without notice for him to make sure he's ready for the corporate world.
It's no longer our goal to watch cartoons we must now focus on breakfast then action figures.

"But Daddy," he says. "I like cartoons."

"I know it hurts," I say.
"But action figures are what we need right now."

So he finishes his cereal and plays with plastic superheroes before a blank television.

