

The Window

by Mark Waldrop

Out the window, the butterfly
had escaped,
beyond my perception and maybe into someone else's.
The little boy with the kite stared back,
wound his string,
and ended his afternoon.

