

Introducing Molloy Foppiano

by Mathew Paust

Before Andromeda can swallow us

by Molloy Foppiano

Before Andromeda can swallow us
expand our stars, spider-web our intricacies, contract the void, suffocate the noise with an unknown silence

Before 115 images of home that were etched into plates of gold can be displayed or crash and burn

The spitting,
cussing,
drinking,
gingham madonnas
and linen mariners whose cars fill the expressway in a snapshot of the year of '77 will drive to the ends of the earth and carve their existence into the tables in the bars that swallowed them whole

And the New-Age Poets will follow the curves and the lines left by those forgotten Authors as they enjoy their final meal before the blackhole consumes Andromeda.

Molloy is a 17 year old writer who has just begun the journey that is poetry and creative writing. Like most writers she imparts personal experiences into her work. This ranges from her struggles with anorexia to a recent bipolar diagnosis to the ludicrously simple woes of time. She is currently and will always be growing into the edges that writing has to offer her.

<https://writinginawomansvoice.blogspot.com/>

