We The Kings

by Matt Kang

Crowned in regal reds and byzantine blues this man looms over us. He asks for some small significance—something he knows the world can't give, but he ask for, anyways—he wants to be shocked, he wants to be surprised, so that he can feel like he did when he was a boy, when the jewels weren't on his head; they were in his eyes.

Available online at «http://fictionaut.com/stories/matt-kang/we-the-kings» Copyright © 2010 Matt Kang. All rights reserved.