NOLA's Nightcap

by Miranda Merklein

I drove the back
way back from the store, refilled your cup with boiled peanuts. Summerflea,

I need to be commended, despite the wine glass that threw itself at your sister's head of rollers. Imagine a pear in the deli meat aisle, ripening behind glass, while at the Texaco station, two women in nightclothes sip hot drinks on the curb. Seven in the morning, watching for the blue sedan.
