China

by Pete Domican

Your words broke me Like a china vase dropped to the floor And though the pieces were recovered Stuck together with love and compassion The cracks are there for those who look I was happy to be there, content in that place You wanting to be somewhere else Never telling me where you needed to be Or how I could take you there Scared of repeating the past Running away from him and me