

when i take a hint, i take it really hard

by Peter DeWolf

it's the constant reminders
of something that was never a constant remind her
but i suppose
there is no
ticking clock on that which is wondrous
and it was right
right
it's hard to come up with cleverly phrased
universal truths
and
it's hard
to make unique
what we've all
felt impressed that i could see what was obvious
i think now

was really just gratitude that i
loved it
all
even the parts
that crushed
thoroughly
sometimes on highways
the best parts
of the drive
are the dips
and sudden hills
the imperfections
are what give you that feeling
the trick is
and always was figuring out how
if it's possible
to take the feeling
home
with you

