

a microcosm

by Randal Houle

He enters the well-ordered office. Papers pile high on the left side of the desk. The right side is empty, waiting to receive the load like a catcher behind home plate. He rifles through a drawer. Stops. "My favorite fishing lure!" He turns out the lights. Nature swallows him whole.

