

All there is

by Sara Fitzpatrick Comito mistake intention for actual memory the lack of speed is frightening, running to deal with the crisis, not getting there fast enough and you never did turn on the tea.

There are monks who say if you didn't get enough early on in life, you need anchoring to the earth.

You need buttered broths and to copy old writings by hand by very poor light.

Ruin your eyes
it always comes back to the mother somehow.

We're not equipped to deal with speeding trains, that step off the platform always the skirting of two unknowns

one of going, one of coming away and no — it's not the same thing.

The relief of meeting with something solid. Let them step over my fetal form. All the subway police need to know: here is all there is.
