

Blind Observer.

by Shan Shaikh

I sat there, observing the city people.
Frowns upon all our faces.
The rain moistened my heart and journal.

A blind family; a trio.
They used their wands to lead the way.
Their faces read joy but, most importantly, satisfaction.

My envy filled the damp page.

