love poem for the homeless man who was killed on wednesday night

by StacyMichelle

I wanted to tell you
the moon was beautiful
tonight. full & close
to the earth. bright
enough to steer
your way up the parkway.
so the cars & trucks
could see you plodding
to your box & paper home.
your past—heaped
in a double-wide grocery cart—arriving two seconds ahead of you.

I wanted to apologize for the young mother who snatched her son away from you. not knowing you preferred the backs of people & only spoke with signs. who didn't know you never begged for money. but pitched silver tent on busy intersections & held posters reminding of Veteran's & Memorial day. King & Grandparent's day.

Available online at http://fictionaut.com/stories/stacymichelle/love-poem-for-the-homeless-man-who-was-killed-on-wednesday-night © 2014 StacyMichelle. All rights reserved.

I wanted to say
it was your hands—caked
with years-old clay & quaking from too much solitude—
that compelled me
to find you docked
on Presidential. lay
raincoat. unbruised fruit.
jugs of water beside your cart. earnest offerings
you left untouched.