

34

by stephen hastings-king

The space they are in is years long. Two, they hover on a threshold. One reaches to touch the other. The hand goes through. Waves radiate. The past is made of water.

But they seem happier now thanks to the memory pills. Each moment is shiny like a toy.

