Mesh

by stephen hastings-king

Beneath wire trees in the mottled light where clouds skim along the ground and pass through geometries within which densities of absence give way to slow-motion horses he is driving and standing in front of the same car. Moist beads of impact form a mesh across his face. Everything is soft and falling.