

Particle (7)

by stephen hastings-king

By the time he says “I am tired of the smell of pig shit and death” you've already lost interest in him, bourbon and pathos, in the Christmas lights that hang overhead, in the background of pool tables and flaccid country music, and don't know why you say “I want a bubble bath.”

