

Self Pity

by stephen hastings-king

When the army was bulldozing grandmother's house, I pointed out the curiously attractive whistling sounds that were emanating from the engine. But my family was otherwise occupied. Such is the way of things. I lay my treasures at their feet to be ignored.

