

concession to the shapes of hunger

by strannikov

although tastes may change amidst food chain collapse, hunger won't do much for nutritional gaps.

why limit the number of kids that we have?
who'd want to risk having our human herds halved?

we've evolved for ourselves such versatile fare
that diet restrictions just wouldn't be fair:

to keep menu options robust and alive,
let's observe dietary options that thrive

among species sharing this same planet home:
legalize cannibalism—blood, flesh, and bone.

(no one need fear timidity in our tastes—we like trying new things, no matter our hastes!)

let necessity guide gastronomic zeal:
that will insure cannibalism's appeal.

