

No Risks Left To Take.

by Tabatha Stirling

There are no risks left to take. The notion of solitude hums with happiness. Bees gather particularly good honey and a hurricane stops suddenly, deciding not to embark on its natural terror hunt.

And I just keep avoiding the knives, the pills and the booze.

And the risk.

