

A Shot at Pool

by Tim Young

Looking at Periscope
at my local beautiful blonde bends down for
a shot at pool
old friend digs my tapping on the bar on Periscope smoking stuff blows smoke rings
through my mind

New waitress/bartender draws my attention to bare ankles and red hair
the guitar player is fishing in the dark and teasing with stairway to you know

Seems like such a long trip to tomorrow and the Dead ain't coming even close but it's all right
blue mood seeps in like chilled whiskey

If I'm looking over my shoulder the mist of yesterday
hangs across the boards like Tom Dooley
lifting my spirits when the blonde orders another IPA
so I sip mine

If still I smoked cigarettes I would set fire to three or four
my lungs singing for more like Robert Plant inside my brain sings like holy scriptures in the sky

If I could only remember what happened next surely another song would quickly melt on my lips
while my guts spilled more quickly then rain on the floor

Leaving my tip on my tab dreaming of such a long goodnight the darker it becomes the more I end up thinking about the light
