Reading Ancient History in the Evening

by XXXX

In my dreams I am cremated in the burning Library of Alexandria. Can you inhale the knowledge of late antiquity? I will try to remember that the Earth is a spheroid nonetheless, and that the world is composed either of fire, water, or numbers.

Much of this I do not understand, but the Egyptian sky is so beautiful, as I see it from the collapsed ceiling of this ancient monument. I realize why they built it and why they burn it down.

Papyrus smoke smells so sweet.

I wish you could smell it with me, before I am crushed by debris.