Realizing I Have Not Moved From My Bed for Two Days

by XXXX

Quite frankly you are ruining my life. I know you don't mean to, but you are. Like a car accident your face appears out of nowhere when I close my eyes and you collide into me, your body heavy on mine and your breath warm on my face. I spend hours sitting alone just because I cannot function like this.

My hormones are going crazy. I cry in the kitchen for hours. I try to think of different reasons of why I may be going hysterical: Baby seals are dying in Canada. There is a rebellion in Syria. A lot of stuff is going down in Africa.

While taking a dump today I stayed on the toilet until my family went searching for me, thinking I ran away. I wish I could. You and I to some place without cable TV or highways. Maybe somewhere with a view.

You won't be interested, though. I am such an ugly boy. I drown in my own loneliness, choke on my own disgusting habits.

Available online at http://fictionaut.com/stories/xxxx--7/realizing-i-have-not-moved-from-my-bed-for-two-days Copyright © 2013 XXXX. All rights reserved.

You'd do no better. I've been practicing for the rest of my life, and I am still no good.

I just like thinking about you. At least I have that. And poetry. I write about you, and my words immortalize your beauty, forever incorruptible so long as ink is in supply and people can read.

Sometimes I eat my feelings, sometimes I write them down. That is why I am fat, and that is why I am a writer.

You are my muse. When I miss you, I eat. When I miss you, I write. Both I probably do too much.